For designers who have been using Photoshop for several years, you may not want to learn a new program, particularly a program like Illustrator, that seems so much like Photoshop. We recommend instead that you learn to use a different program to edit raster images, such as Adobe Photoshop. If you have a friend who has a copy of Photoshop, ask that person to give you access to his or her copy of the program. You can get Photoshop for free when you first start using it and get a copy of the software for your other programs, too. Using Photoshop's drawing tools As an advanced image manipulation program, Photoshop boasts features that enable you to create your own distinctive styles, but it also allows you to change or modify existing images, which saves you time. You can manipulate images in a variety of ways: Hand-drawing layers: This technique enables you to create a layer in the Layers palette, draw lines on the canvas, and then rearrange the order of those layers to make an image appear to be drawn with pen and ink. Using an eraser to make or erase layers: You can select a specific area on a layer and easily erase it with the Eraser tool, thereby erasing the image or creating a new layer underneath. Transforming objects: You can easily change the size, shape, and position of a document or an object. You can also use the Warp tool to stretch or distort objects. Saving an image: You can save a document by choosing File⇒Save, or by pressing Ctrl+S (⌘-S) on a Mac. This enables you to create a file containing just the content you've created and saved, with no layers or embedded objects. Editing images Photoshop has several tools that enable you to edit images: Gradient: Gradients can be applied to layers to create color and shading effects. You can change the attributes of a gradient such as its direction and intensity or the blending mode used. Widget: You can easily create a button, sliders, and other widgets on a canvas and then change their properties. Transform: This feature makes it easy to move, stretch, and squish images. You can also use the Eraser tool to erase an area, which opens up the option to create new layers and layers underneath. Layer: You can make a layer invisible and then create new layers over it to create the appearance of layers.

Q: SQL Server: how do i check for the existence of records in a table before inserting into it I have a table which stores a record for every document which is copied to a different folder ID Name Date (datetime) -- 1 Document 1 2015-01-20 2 Document 2 2015-01-25 3 Document 3 2015-01-27 If a user copies Document 2 and saves it to a different location, it will not be saved in the table. I would like the program to detect the above and throw an error or return a message Thanks A: Something like this might work. insert into table select @identifier, 'Record added' from Documents d where not exists(select * from Documents d2 where d.id = d2.id and d.name = d2.name) This would return a message that the record already exists. Hi, here's our project, we are proposing to build a suite of modules that will give root access in a web browser. we already have a conceptualized basic module and we are now trying to get it to a state that it can be reviewed by the community. the basic module is already in the repository, but we are trying to find some reviewers. I think there's also a use for such a module, is there a way to remote connect to others browsers, can you forward keyboard or mouse events to other browsers? So that you can trigger actions like opening browser tabs. I'd definitely love to see this going forward. I'd even love to see a friend or two on the council reviewing your project! However, I'm also very interested in creating this type of project myself. I think there's a way that I can help you make it work. Just let me know.Oxysterols, lipid mediators derived from cholesterol, regulate gene expression. The overall objective of this program is to help individuals with this disorder to successfully perform on the Pfund et al. Specialized Driving Test (SDT) to obtain licenses to drive motorized vehicles to insure safe operations of these highly complex machines. A second objective of the program is to improve the clinical management of individuals with MS by increasing our knowledge of psychiatric and physical problems related to driving as well as the behavioral aspects associated with MS and with driving. The first two years of this program will lead to the development of a model that will be expanded during the next five years. This model will be used to examine the impact of MS on a person's ability to safely drive. Subjects (N=100) with MS will be enrolled in this program for 6 months; they will be evaluated clinically, functionally, and psychiatrically; and they will be tested on the Pfund et al. SDT. Subjects with MS will have the opportunity to identify themselves in the program's sample list if they desire to do so. Additional subjects (N=50) with MS will complete this program and be followed at 2 and 5 years after they complete it. These subjects will be identified from the regional registry of persons with MS in the state of Michigan. Only subjects with MS who meet the eligibility requirements, including a determination of whether they can drive to perform the SDT, will be enrolled in this program. Of the eligible subjects, 50% will be male and 50% will be female. This sample will consist of 4 groups based on the presence of MS and its severity. We will assess the relationship between each predictor variable and performance of the SDT. We will also determine whether, and if so, what type of intervention(s) can be used to improve the driving ability of this population. We will pursue several specific research objectives. These include, (1) comparing performance of the SDT by a group of subjects with MS with performance by healthy matched control subjects; (2) determining the effect of fatigue on SDT performance by subjects with MS; (3) assessing the ability of motor evoked potentials (MEPs) to predict SDT performance by subjects with MS; and (4) establishing the relationship between the symptoms of MS as determined by the Expanded Disability Status Scale (EDSS) and the SDT.Q: angularJS: How to remove an attribute from an array of objects with a condition I want to remove an attr('href') from an array with a condition.
