NYC Share Kitten Cafe Opens In NYC Between the Line By now, most of us have seen the grown-up catnip teddy-bear photos that have been posted online. But there's more to the story than that. Really. The concept, made popular in Vancouver by St. Bernard's Cafe, is a completely new take on an iconic-but-fading New York treat: the cat cafe. Kitty Connoisseurs have been reading the tea leaves on the cat café trend and wondering whether or not it's a serious business, and are now getting a chance to see for themselves. Feline fans can now sign up for a tour of Kitten Cafe, a cat-centered coffee shop that opened this past Sunday in the East Village. The cafe has 12 dedicated kitties and owners who work to create a relaxing environment for both cats and humans. The friendly feline owners are trained to sit still and give all the attention they need to each visitor. They also have the best seats in the house, offering one of the best views in the house. That's right, your eyes will be right on top of these adorable creatures as they saunter around the floor with their tails wagging. The food menu is designed to make for a well-balanced, healthy snack, so neither kitty nor owner will be left hungry. With a cat's appetite, this can be a bit of a challenge for a cafe owner, but the Cat Café in England was inspired by the same concerns, and they have an interesting solution. They have a kitty kookaburra bird, who eats a chicken-and-potato mix and is kept happy and well-fed. Kitten Cafe opened on East 9th Street and Second Avenue on Sunday, November 10th and has a waiting list.

The next location is scheduled to open in Manhattan in the fall of 2014.Q: SQL query in C#: best way to stop large update? My SQL tables has a column of type TIMESTAMP with a defined default constraint of "CURRENT_TIMESTAMP". I have large update to run, and I need to know if an update has been scheduled. f678ea9f9e
